“Where does the line get drawn between technology and feel in sailing?”

Conrad has always been drawn to the water whether it was mucking around on inflatable dinghies or racing offshore on IMOCA60s. Making the difficult decision last year to delve deeper into the advances of design at Ker Yacht Design rather than the Southern Ocean, he's been struck by the steadily blurring line between where sailing ends and computers begin.

Conrad is currently blending his time between designing yachts at Ker Yacht Design in Winchester, bringing together industry and families to give the next generation the skills and confidence required to become engineers and the continual pursuit to enter the Vendée Globe.

Join him in the bar from 1930 for drinks and a chat before a delicious dinner at 2000 of Steak & Kidney pudding.
